Toronto is widely considered to be one of the most multicultural cities in Canada and even North America. This documentary looks into why french speaking new Canadians are moving to Toronto, how they integrate and make it feel like home.

Longer description of show/content

Toronto is widely considered to be one of the most multicultural cities in Canada and even North America. You can't go a couple blocks without passing by a new and different cultural neighbourhood and the city is all the better for it. But an important important piece of Canada's cultural history seems to be missing: Francophone communities. Many Torontonians wouldn't know that they are here. However immigration is giving a new life and meaning to french communities in this city. This documentary looks into why french speaking new Canadians are moving to Toronto, how they integrate and make it feel like home.
