

About the Documentary: The main goal of "True Contact: Resonating Reconciliation in Southern Alberta" was to enlighten the community about the past. The documentary team learned early on how little the community knew about residential schooling and the direct impact they have had on the Lethbridge community. Lethbridge has a visual separation between the Aboriginal community and the rest of the population and this documentary is aiming to bridge that gap that the community has been living in. The first step to connecting the communities to each other is to inform. This documentary features several community members' perspectives as well as a residential school survivors experience, merging the two sides in one documentary to create an enlightening and touching audio piece.

Lauren Crazybull is a programmer at CKXU 88.3 FM. She hosts an hour long folk radio program called "Bridges and Balloons" which airs weekly. Lauren is a Sociology major at the University of Lethbridge and hopes to get into the field of Social Work at the end of her degree. She is also pursuing Art and has had her art published and featured around Lethbridge. Lauren produced the documentary "True Contact: Resonating Reconciliation in Southern Alberta," alongside many CKXU members and community members. She will be continuing to shed light on issues using the mediums of radio and art.
