“Energy Voices” Program Description

Student Energy is a global not-for-profit that is creating the next generation of energy leaders committed to transitioning the world to a sustainable future. Student Energy and their volunteers have teamed up with CJSW 90.9 FM here in Calgary to produce a radio show/podcast with the goal of presenting discussions and ideas that provoke a meaningful dialogue around sustainability and our future.

The episode that we would like you to consider, “The Great Pipeline Debate” perfectly encompasses the type of meaningful conversation that can result when representatives from multiple sides of a debate come together to share their point of view.

The discussion features the first public debate between renowned Environmentalist Tzeporah Berman, Executive Director of the Coastal First Nations Art Sterritt, and the President of the Northern Gateway Pipelines John Carruthers.

The episode also features a chat with Peter Smalley who explores the business minded argument for sustainability. Also included in the episode is a segment titled “This Month in Energy History” as well as global updates from Student Energy's volunteers around the world. This episode's updates came from a volunteer in Scotland and a volunteer in South Africa.

Biographies of the Producers

Sean Collins is a Co-founder of Student Energy, a global non-profit that is building a movement of young leaders who are committed to transitioning the world to a sustainable energy future. He is the host of Energy Voices on CJSW 90.9FM and is deeply passionate about education, entrepreneurship and energy.

Marc Affeld began volunteering at CJSW 90.9 FM in Calgary in 2009 beginning by co-producing the NCRA award winning podcast “Today in Canadian History”.
